We can't believe Saturday will be five weeks that we have had Cash! He still seems to be enjoying his "forever stay" with us . As you can see from the attached pics see he has found the bed(s) in the house and made himself right at home. He is still sleeping in his kennel at night but there is definitely some napping being done in our beds. We have offered Amelia's bed at night but he jumps down and goes to his kennel. He seems to feel very secure there we guess. It is amazing we can walk past him at night and not a peep out of him. He makes himself very comfortable during the day in a human bed but not at night, at least not yet. He loves to nap with me though and sometimes I'll lay down during the day just so I can snuggle him. He is getting along with everyone at home and vice versa. Clint the puppy is still his favorite, but he and Monte have become inseparable also (probably because they both have an endless supply of energy). So that relationship has settled out nicely. The pictures of them in the bed together show that. He did eat some weeds the other day and vomited 3 times in a short period, so as a precaution we rushed him to the vet. He was fine of course, just us being a little paranoid. I am always super cautious with my boys & with his history didn't want to miss anything. Of course he was frolicking around and sniffing all the girls at the office! They were looking at us like "this dog is fine". Dr. Warren got to meet him though & said he was beautiful of course. He is still right around 65lbs and Dr. Warren feels that will probably be the weight he stays around. He loves riding in Bill's truck although he thinks he should be in the front passenger seat.
